Back pain is a signal that something is wrong.

Sudden onset of pain or a chronic, dull ache in your back could indicate that you have a vertebral compression fracture.

A vertebral compression fracture occurs when the bones of the spine become compressed due to trauma. The vertebrae most commonly broken are those in the lower back, but they may break in any portion of the spine.

If you do have a fractured spine you may be a candidate for kyphoplasty.

- A needle is placed through the skin and into the spine bone. Real-time x-ray images are used to guide the doctor to the correct area in your lower back.
- A balloon is placed through the needle, into the bone, and then inflated. This restores the height of the vertebrae. Cement is then injected into the space to make sure it does not collapse again.

Other procedures the PMH Pain Management physicians perform include:

- Nerve blocks
- Epidural steroid injections
- Spinal cord stimulation
- Intrathecal pain pumps
- And many others
